Google Bar Search should be able to open Chrome

I've stumbled upon this post:

<https://www.reddit.com/r/GooglePixel/s/PmrCqmzD1r>

This still opens the search in app. Only when you press a link it opens in Chrome. Any idea how I can get it to use only as a "fast search" method? By this I mean to tap the Google Bar, search for something and have the Google Search open in Chrome so I can keep it for later.

I usually let different topics open in my browser so that I can come back to them later, but the search history quickly gets cluttered and manually deleting each "clutter" entry is not really a viable option.

It's easier to just close the "clutter" pages right after you finish with them.

All of this just because google doesn't give me the option to delete the Google Bar from the home screen and replace it with the Chrome widget.

Is there any workaround that I'm not aware of?

I hope it never does. Or more exactly : I hope they won't force it.

When I search something with the search bar, it's 99.9% of the time something I just need a quick search for, and will never come back to again.

For the 0.1% left where it's a search I know I'll need later, I just press the "open in chrome" button from the top right corner.

Search icons (magnifying glass, close) and navigation icons (Create, bell, profile) are visible at the top.

Nothing besides changing launchers to remove the bar altogether. Google is too greedy to let us do what we want.

P.S. there are much better browsers than chrome. Brave, Firefox, duck duck go, edge, etc.

This is by design. It's a Google Pixel. You want to search in Chrome? Add the damn Chrome widget. Shocker, I know, but learning your phone is tantamount to using it.

Yes, but why doesn't it let me remove the Google Bar?
