

Skip to main contentr/GooglePixel ×

Search in r/GooglePixel

Create

r/GooglePixel • 1mo ago

ukiibeats Top 1% Poster

...

Google denied my claim after I received stones instead of a phone

Hi everyone,

this is an update to my original post where I explained that I ordered a Pixel from the Google Store and received a package filled with stones instead of a phone.

Here is the official reply I finally received from Google (Google replied in German, I translated their response to English.):

"Decision on the claim: The investigation found confirmed activity on the device after it was reported lost or stolen. This activity directly violates our lost/stolen device policies. Therefore, your request for a replacement or refund has been denied. A replacement order cannot be sent because the order was successfully delivered to the correct destination. This decision is final. Our team has completed all possible reviews, and no further escalations or discussions regarding this case will be opened"

Honestly, I dont get their reasoning... Their logic seems to be: if a phone was stolen, no one would ever use it? (what nonsense...) The order was delivered to the correct address... Yo, people, I actually went to the DHL office and picked it up myself, what...

I have already contacted the police, I hope this will help at least somehow.

this is my old post for context

Final update: the official PixelCommunity Reddit account reached out to me and escalated the case to a different internal support team. After further review, the issue has been resolved and a replacement device will be sent.

I appreciate that Google support took another look at this case and addressed the situation. Thanks as well to everyone here for the input and support.

548

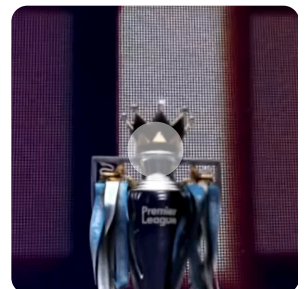

125

Share

Vn88mkt • Promoted

...

SABA 유명한 아시안 뷰 스포츠 베팅이 이제 이곳에서 가능합니다! BT1 (한국) 한국 플레이어들을 위한 특별한 스포츠 베팅 인터페이스!

Learn Morekr.w88info.com

Skip to main contentCreateSort by: Best ▾Search Comments-TheReal- • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

I swear local stores will be making a comeback because this kind of parcel theft is getting out of hand.

withoutapaddle • 1mo ago

It's extremely regional. I have literally received thousands of packages without a single theft, and they just get left on a wide open front porch, highly visible and only 20ft from the street.

toyssamurai • 1mo ago

I agreed. My delivery often stays in front of my door for a whole day until I come home.

not_achef • 1mo ago

The rock substitution could have happened anywhere from the manufacturer to the warehouse to through the shipment to the customer. Did it look factory sealed...

+ 1 more replylildobe • 1mo ago

Pixel 10 Pro XL, Pixel 7 Pro, Watch 4, Buds Pro 2

I only ever buy things like cell phones at brick and mortar stores. I've seen far too many people get ripped off like this for phones, video cards, laptops, etc.

Yeah, it costs a few dollars more, but for the piece of mind it's worth it.

Plus, when I buy my phone from my carrier's corporate-owned store, if something goes wrong with it in the first year, they handle the RMA for me. It's shipped by them, they receive it back, and I go pick it up. So if the phone gets stolen in-transit, it's not my problem, it's theirs.

Substantial-Pop-2702 • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo ago

Not sure it helps.

This happened in an Apple Store almost 10 years ago.

When I bought it the Apple clerk asked me if I wanted to open the box as it was my first iPhone and help me set it up, as I'm not tech illiterate I didn't want to but he insisted.

When we opened the box (which was sealed and everything) there were AA batteries wrapped in paper tissue, they were all stumped for a good 20 minutes and scrambled to give me a new device.

So the only winning move is to open it in the store, to confirm the device is in it.

Since then, I don't leave a store with expensive electronics without opening it first.

Skip to main content+ Create

Just film yourself opening the package? Also the weight wouldn't be correct, would it? So its rather easy to proof you got something wrong all things considered...

-TheReal- • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

I'd rather not have all the hassle. Once it happens to you, you have all the hassle and if it's getting resolved without getting a lawyer depends on if some support rep had a good sleep last night. No thanks.

+ 2 more replies

ew73 • 1mo ago

Pixel 10

Top 1% Commenter

Non serious:

I would start submitting reviews of the phone and including pictures of the rocks attempting to be used as a phone. Like, paint 1 - 9 on the rocks and try to "dial" a number, report "0/10 stars, phone does not connect because it is rocks and not a phone"

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

Haha, that's a good idea. The funny part is that the box literally says "magic happen" I guess it really did... magic stones.

ew73 • 1mo ago

Pixel 10

Top 1% Commenter

For a serious answer, though - it's time to involve your local government / consumer protection stuff. In the US, I'd be looking at state attorney general offices, but I have no idea what that looks like overseas.

Wattenloeper • 1mo ago

In Germany f.e. the sender has just to proof that the item has been shipped. Slight different rules on return item. If the dealer determines the complete return process (like f.e. Amazon and others) the risk is up to the process owner. Otherwise same rules as on purchase.

+ 5 more replies

Impressionsoflakes • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

They're claiming that you lied about the phone being stolen as it was activated shortly after they believe you took possession of it. By you, they think.

Skip to main content

Create

turned on after.

What I find most annoying is that phone manufacturers are quite capable of locating a stolen phone anywhere in the world and bricking it instantly - but they don't because the market for innocent people replacing their thieved phones is about 1/4 of their income.

chic_luke • 1mo ago

Pixel 2 XL

Samsung does... even too much. As soon as my RMA for my former Samsung phone was approved, it was permanently bricked mere hours after.

CunningLogic • 1mo ago

Google does it as well. Back when some nexus phones running pre release firmware hit eBay, they remotely bricked them (technically just wiped the firmware - we were able to re flash them to older firmware)

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

The funny part is that when I was communicating with Google support, they wrote that the phone would be blocked

Yes, damn it block it. I'm absolutely fine with that!

RoyalOakPiguet • 1mo ago

If they opened it at DHL like they say and an employee was the one who stole it they could have just activated it after OP picked "it" up

[deleted] • 1mo ago

OK, they're saying the phone got used after delivery. That changes nothing, of course it was used if it got stolen. Someone turned it on, activated it, all that. The real question is, with which Google account was it used? For sure not yours, right? Sorry you're going through this, it sucks. Since you're in the EU, I'd totally push this further, this situation is just not fair.

droans • 1mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro XL

They would likely try to claim he sold or gave it away.

But yeah, push this further. File complaints with any legal body or regulator you can. File a police report. Request that the IMEI is blacklisted and the device locked down.

Skip to main content+ Create

just ignore you until you submitted that. So submit that, and have a look for the consumer rights/protection for Europe (official site from EU), and contact them as well. In my case, they would also contact Amazon, putting some extra pressure on them. They also build cases around this.

This is a case of return fraud. Someone bought it, got the phone, resealed the package and returned it. It's dirty as fuck, and of course very hard to prove. For expensive stuff, I try to film getting the package from the parcel locker and opening it in one go. They will still make you jump around and waste a lot of time, but at least you have some proof.

The Amazon packages have a label on the item if it was returned, used for internal tracking, which would help with the thesis. Maybe Google has something like this too?

(The 3rd time, I ordered the drone in a more local store. Probably the easiest option if the price difference isn't too big.)

resueuqinu • 1mo ago

Pixel 6 Pro

IMHO a returned device should be sold as refurbished and go through the refurbishing process. Replacing a seal is too easy these days.

Tribalbob • 1mo ago

Pixel 8 Pro Pixel Watch 2

This is why whenever I order a phone, I record the moment I receive it from the delivery to opening it up. Just in case.

withoutapaddle • 1mo ago

I always wanted to ask people who do this... Do you sit outside waiting for the delivery person all day or what?

I have a job and a family. I'm not exactly willing/able to wait at the curb for 8+ hours to record myself being handed a box. Any recording that starts with the package already on your property could just be faked.

The delivery drivers around here and pull up, toss something at your porch, and drive away before you can even get to the front door, and that assumes you get an alert from a camera or something that a person is outside.

The manufacturer never does signature required shipping either. Not for phones, laptops, computers/parts, etc.

Tribalbob • 1mo ago

Pixel 8 Pro Pixel Watch 2

I live in an apartment, they have to be buzzed in so it goes directly to my phone.

Skip to main content+ Create

1 more reply

ViegoBot • 1mo ago

Yep, did the same with my 9 Pro XL from googlestore. With any item over 50$ (to me) its generally a good idea to do this for.

For example with trading cards, pokemon cards specifically, from TPC's storefront online, some people in the past everything they ordered was opened, and the hit cards taken out with the dice and bulk cards left remaining. DHL/USPS/FedEx, etc can be trash people, and it might not even be the delivery driver doing it, as these things happen in transit/warehouses too.

JaspahX • 1mo ago

Pixel 10 Pro XL

Delivered by your buddy in some fake FedEx delivery clothes. /s u/PlugableOfficial • Promoted

You can run five 4K displays from one USB-C port with the most impressive laptop dock I've ever seen

windowscentral.comEckengammler81 • 1mo ago

Did your package also come via the Netherlands? I've ordered a few packages through their New Year's promotion too. I have a bad feeling about this. I've already had trouble with Amazon about this kind of mess; the items I ordered weren't included. It's annoying that this is starting to happen with Google now too.

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Yes, the package came from the Netherlands. I'd recommend recording the unboxing on video.

Eckengammler81 • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo ago

Yes, I'll definitely do that. After the Amazon fiasco, that's the only way I'll handle it now, and I won't accept any packages with strange taping anymore. I think that happened at the parcel center back then.

Skip to main content+ Create

So, the first package containing the watch and Pixel Pro arrived today. Everything was fine. I'd also say that with this type of packaging, any tampering would be immediately obvious. I'm getting four more deliveries from there tomorrow.

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

Could you please share how the outer packaging looked? In my case, the tape itself was intact, but the adhesive layer had been removed

Euchre • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

Some observations here:

- If Google knows that the device was 'active', this means it was able to 'call home' and report itself to 'mother Google'. If Google is obeying basic contract law, this should not happen until after one agrees to the EULA (End User License Agreement) as part of the OOB (Out Of the Box Experience). If the step of connecting to their home servers and reporting any personal data is involved before you accept the EULA, they're violating your privacy - and in the EU, especially Germany, that could be very bad for them.
- Early in the setup, you are offered to use a different device you already have, presumably with a Google account, which would mean you'd already agreed to the EULA for Android before. That said, it also would mean Google should know if the device was connecting to them using a Google account other than the one used to order the device.
- Also early in the setup process, you are asked to connect to a Wifi network and/or insert a SIM or add an eSIM. This usually happens before you accept the EULA, and may be when the 'activity' was 'detected'. Again, not a good situation for privacy standards in some countries. However, another key portion to remember is if Google knows upon that connection that the phone is 'active', they know information about that connection, like the IP, the Wifi SSID, or cellular network. If any of those is not a connection used or available to you, then it proves you did not perform such 'activity on the device'.

Since you say you're going to the police, you should ask them to officially request any information about the connection used to perform this 'activity on the device'. That would be critical to the police investigating where the stolen device is. Of course, the police should expect that if the device is still active, they can report where it is active.

Basically, Google or their distributor in Germany have to fess up to knowing things, like if the Google account used on the device doesn't match the one used for ordering the device.

boost2525 • 1mo ago

Honestly, there is an easy fix to all of this... When you buy a phone, Google should ask which account it's for. Initial setup should be blocked for anyone except that account (unless some sort of "unlock command" is issued by that account holder).

It would make stolen phones worthless.

Skip to main content+ CreateTop 1% Commenter

OK, so that would've created a problem for me. I bought my lady a Pixel 9a as a gift, and of course I was on my Google account when I did so. If Google were to implement something like this, they'd have to ask during purchase if the device was for you, or a gift.

boost2525 • 1mo ago

> unless some sort of "unlock command" is issued by that account holder

I mean, I put the solution to your theoretical problem right there in the text you replied to.

Euchre • 1mo agoTop 1% Commenter

That adds a complexity that could cause issues when gifting isn't done in the presence of the giver. It'd be easier to have the device ready to be used on a different account than your own - which is probably part of why Google hasn't done this kind of special preparation. Doing so on the device would mean having to access the device before packaging it up for delivery, and I guarantee you they are pulling these orders from caseloads of sealed product. It would be far easier for Google to use a 'phone home' method, where the device has to validate to allow use on any specific account. I think this is also complicated for the European market because Google is clearly outsourcing pretty much all of its operations there to 3rd parties. That's another layer of tracking IMEIs and serials, even if you're buying from the Google Store, because that order is being processed through that 3rd party who will then have to tell Google which IMEI/serial was shipped to the Google account that ordered. All that considered, I doubt solutions that are so specific are that likely. At best, if they would emulate the IMEI ban list method used by at least US carriers, they could prohibit the device from using the Play Store or from receiving updates until the correct account is signed in, or the buyer releases the device by signing into their account, to allow a different account to be added - much as it works for second hand devices now.

+ 6 more repliesmunta20 • 1mo agoPixel 9

Try with the Credit card chargeback

Jack_Shid • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo agoPixel 10 Pro Fold and Pixel 10 Pro XL on T-Mobile Top 1% Commenter

Only do this if you do not value anything that's stored in your Google account, because Google will close and delete that account IMMEDIATELY if you do a chargeback.

ukiibeats OP • 1mo agoTop 1% Poster

Skip to main contentCreatekzone186 • 1mo ago

Interesting, I never thought about this, but where does the consumer protection go when you use buy now, pay later services? Does Klarna give you an option to dispute the charge if you log in or contact their support?

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

In Klarna, I immediately paused the payment after receiving the package and reported the issue there.

zanhecht • 1mo ago

Back up anything valuable in your Google account. Google tends to ban people for chargebacks.

NatoBoram • 1mo ago

Pixel 10 Pro XL

You may want to go to <https://takeout.google.com> and grab everything you can while your account still exists

easyPandthenutsackrs • 1mo ago

A few years ago I remember it was suggested to buy a phone with a brand new gmail, that wasn't connected/linked to your main one, so if you had to do a charge back they wouldn't lock down and close down your main Gmail acct. Is this still the case? Can they connect the two?

Nowadays you have to game the system so much to avoid their fuckery. I'll never buy a phone online due to this reason and this example from the OP. (I miss the Nexus days and being able to root and control your own phone).

Dayv1d • 1mo ago

beyond aggravating. Please sue them and contact consumer protection...

UncleCunk • 1mo ago

I've seen people file police reports and then sending the report back to the company as proof and it was successful. Hopefully that'll make Google sh*t their multi-trillion pants a bit and send you another phone.

LostInTheRapGame • 1mo ago

Skip to main content+ Create

I also don't understand why a police report would make them shit. Like for what?

They'll either send a replacement or they won't. No one is shitting over it.

Difficult_Plantain89 • 1mo ago

This one police report will shut down Google for good! /S

Jupilaire • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo ago

The "Google shitting their pants" argument is crap, but filing a police report is the best idea, after Google refused responsibility. Now it's to the customer to refuse responsibility.

When filing a police report in the EU, you press charges against X (unknown), meaning you start a legal action, where you become legally responsible for your claim in front of the justice system. More importantly this creates a legally recognised entity (a thief, though still unknown) based on proof (your claim) who is responsible for the theft. Therefore the customer cannot be considered responsible, until the police investigation concludes otherwise. This allows every party to move forward for different procedures. This is often used for insurance claims (eg. a scratch to your car by an unknown party). The downside is that the company can also wait for the procedure to end before paying up/replacing the product (finding the thief or more often as non-conclusive).

As customer complaints like these create follow-up processes that cost more to the company (eg. human resources) than providing a reimbursement/replacement, they often go through with it and comply. But on the other side, if thefts/losses occur more often, they can also bet on customers to not escalate the issue, and therefore try to close the process as quickly as possible. Additionally AI customer service/ticket management has lowered the costs for managing open complaints.

However, by filing a report with the police, they are forced to keep the complaint open and also more or less managed by a human. So they (again) have to choose what will cost them less.

Additionally, the theft claim is also advantageous for the firm, because it also removes certain responsibilities they could have been sued for, by placing these with the unknown thief, but also the customer (in case he's found to be lying, in which case, the justice system will prosecute the customer, leaving the firm without prosecution costs). Basically, a police report is a double guarantee, because if you are lying, you might "benefit" from the stolen product, but will be way more fucked if you lied to the police/justice system.

With a police report the firm is also able to make an insurance claim for their own merchandise to be reimbursed for the loss due to the replacement item sent to the customer. This is why they also prefer to offer a replacement (loss/insurance only on the manufacturing costs from the second shipment) rather than to offer a reimbursement (loss/insurance of the product + sales margins).

yiaugb52 • 1mo ago

Something similar happened with me. I ordered a pixel 7 pro and I never received it.

Skip to main contentCreate

The day of the delivery I got the case plus a package for work. So in the picture there were 2 packages. But I never received the phone and because of that they never did jack. Neither DHL nor Google.

And my bank refused to charge back because after investigation DHL could prove two packages were shipped...

2 more replies

disputeaz • 1mo ago

What activity are they talking about?

1 more reply

Wattenloeper • 1mo ago

I had the same issue on item return. In my case I had a valid IMEI Number and got information that the phone logged in into the slovenia Telekom network.

Due to the payment method luckily I was able to get my money back.

After this experience I always buy at the local dealer. A bit more expensive, but not as much as the trouble we had caused by DHL drivers.

1 more reply

moose51789 • 1mo ago

Honestly this is why I ended up getting mine through amazon versus google. Too many issues with google shipping and this crap, and i know it could have happened even with amazon, but they are at least a little more fair about it, and what a bummer it would have been to do a chargeback and be banned from amazon lol. Hopefull you get this resolved OP, its crazy that honest people are being treated the way they are because of their (google) own thievery.

1 more reply

saddram • 1mo ago

Someone just had this same issue with a GPU.

They looked got all the shipping information and found where the weight of the package changed. It was stolen in transit.

Good luck!

Skip to main content+ Create + 1 more replyViolet_Renegade • 1mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro XL

Ugh, that's crazy. This kind of thing is why I always set up my phone and begin recording before I even cut the tape on the box when I get a new phone. When I'm sending one back, either for a trade-in or warranty return, I also start recording while the phone is on and showing the imei, and I record turning it off, putting it in the packing box, sealing it up and showing the shipping label. I even record dropping it off at the shipping point. It's overkill, but these phones are too expensive to be ripped off like this. I'm sorry this is happening to you.

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

Yeah, I'll definitely be doing that as well from now on, checking everything before accepting the package, recording the unboxing, etc. What's especially strange in my case is that the tape on the box wasn't cut. Instead, part of the box on the side was torn open and then patched back up with some white adhesive material. Another Reddit user actually sent me photos of how their original box looked, because I wasn't sure what the packaging is supposed to look like, and yes, mine had clearly been tampered with

Bmo0608 • 1mo ago

I always make sure to do the signature required option for shipping because they use FedEx. In my area FedEx is known for stealing or dumping packages they either liked or didn't want to deliver.

I received a literal empty box once, but I was taking a video of myself unboxing for my partner because they were interested in the phone and that ended up saving me. I could literally show me unsealing the empty package with time stamps right after it was delivered.

Now it's always signature option and record myself getting the package and opening for large purchases. Ridiculous that we have to do that but it is what it is I guess.

Konttu • 1mo ago

File a police report for theft. And contact Google with copy of official report.

mathurprateek725 • 1mo ago

This is why local stores need to exist

Skip to main content

Create

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

No, I didn't record an unboxing video. Do you do this all the time? Because I never have :)

Saneless • 1mo ago

For google? Absolutely

I do the same for trade ins because Google sucks

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

After this situation, I will. Learned something... :)

MajorNoodles • 1mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro

What I do is redirect the package to a FedEx location.

Then I open it and tell them I'll sign for it after I verify that there's a phone inside.

BizzyM • 1mo ago

Pixel 7 Pro

And they let you??

MajorNoodles • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro

Yep. They watch me do it.

Toastbuns • 1mo ago

Yeah I video record start to finish my process of resetting and packaging a trade in phone and I make sure to get a receipt when I drop it off. Sad but you can't trust google support.

Saneless • 1mo ago

Yep, especially the resetting part

Jack_Shid • 1mo ago

Pixel 10 Pro Fold and Pixel 10 Pro XL on T-Mobile Top 1% Commenter

Always. Any time I receive anything of value through the mail, UPS, FedEx, whatever, I take video all

Skip to main content

Create

RedditNotFreeSpeech • 1mo ago

It's kind of becoming an unfortunate requirement

Impressionsoflakes • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

I think it would be hard to prove that was an authentic first opening and not an "I've taken the phone out before and repacked with stones" opening - therefore, likely pretty pointless

lonevine • 1mo ago

This is why sensible people don't dick ride for corporate entities, folks. They don't give a flying walrus about your satisfaction beyond the metrics on a power point chart.

msjones71 • 1mo ago

If you paid with a credit card, dispute the charge with the credit card company.

1 more reply

Life_Management8675 • 1mo ago

Lol you have pictures of this? I'd understand if this was from a scammer not from Google themselves

1 more reply

Harpua81 • 1mo ago

Pixel 8 Pro

Support agents are unlikely to generically view activation data for devices not paired or activated to your account. They don't indiscriminately view unrelated data. When they make you validate your account through a push notification or other means, it allows the agent to view information related only to you. If the phone wasn't activated on your account they would not see generic unrelated activated data.

To me, it sounds that you're using reddit to make a fraudulent claim, garner sympathy, and use it as leverage to bully Google into honoring a refund or replacement to fulfill your intent.

You don't happen to be partnering with someone that is demanding to receive a partial refund after successfully defrauding Google are you?

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

Skip to main contentCreate

I am simply describing the situation as it happened and questioning the logic behind the conclusions being drawn. Stating that a phone was "active" without specifying what activity, when exactly, or on which account does not constitute proof of wrongdoing.

I have no partnership with anyone, nor am I seeking any partial refund through deception. This is an unfounded accusation

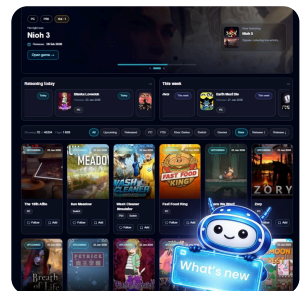

u/elyxo28 • Promoted

A clean way to track upcoming games and see what's new

Learn More

elyxo.gg

CharAznableLoNZ • 1mo ago

Not sure how consumer protection laws go in Germany. Would you be able to reverse the charge with your bank or credit card provider? You paid for a device and received rocks.

[deleted] • 1mo ago

11systems11 • 1mo ago

Charge back on the CC transaction

1 more reply

Kalfu73 • 1mo ago

"Dear Google,

Does the Google account that is now using the device match the account that actually ordered it?

Kthnx"

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

I don't think that proves much, a phone can be activated with any Google account, regardless of which account placed the order

Skip to main contentCreate

I just could not order such an expensive thing online. 🤔

Just because of this very risk.

Sufficient_Summar44 • 1mo ago

CC dispute.

vertigostereo • 1mo ago

Call them. I had a problem fixed that way.

danheinz • 1mo ago

Pixel 8 Pro

I just saw someone having success by getting the detailed tracking information. The customer was able to show that the weight of the package changed along the way. If that's the case also, Google doesn't give a shit and will charge UPS/FedEx

+ 1 more reply

MysteryMeat603 • 1mo ago

I once ordered 2 Chromecasts from Google store and received a couple boxes of 9mm pistol ammunition instead. I'm in Canada and these aren't easy to come by here. I also don't own a pistol or want one but that was pretty wild. They wanted me to send it back but I just cancelled the order. Definitely not comfortable mailing restricted ammunition for the cost of 2 Chromecasts. Pretty wild though.

Wattenloeper • 1mo ago

In Germany a lawyer's most often used words are 'it depends on'. :

https://www.anwalt.de/rechtstipps/paket-verlust-sendung-nicht-angekommen-und-verloren-wer-haftet-wenn-die-ware-weg-ist_183553.html

+ 2 more replies

SnejPro • 1mo ago

Are you from Germany? So Google has to refund you the money. Have you paid with PayPal or Creditcard? Then you might be able to get a refund from PayPal or your CreditCard company

Create

kranbois • 1mo ago

But were they good stones?

1 more reply

Civil-Ad2230 • 1mo ago

Just call the credit card company and issue a charge back, then walk to a store.

Additional-Regret339 • 1mo ago

How are your credit card protections in Germany? In the US we would contest this with our credit card company as fraudulent and they would freeze the payment.

Also request Google to brick the phone.

ukiibeats OP • 1mo ago • Edited 1mo ago

Top 1% Poster

Final update: the official PixelCommunity Reddit account reached out to me and escalated the case to a different internal support team. After further review, the issue has been resolved and a replacement device will be sent.

I appreciate that Google support took another look at this case and addressed the situation. Thanks as well to everyone here for the input and support.

UnderstandingBorn227 • 1mo ago

Pixel 7 Pro

It's a good thing that it was escalated and the problem got solved.

Rich-Towel9507 • 1mo ago

Top 1% Commenter

It's really sad that they only reacted once you went public about it.