I am also unsubbing from r/Google pixel.

General

Not that this is going to matter and I could really give a shit less about the downvotes, but another thread has pretty much summed up the feeling of this sub overall.

I am all for products getting better and I will admit Google is not the perfect company. They flip-flop, change, they can be inconsistent, and sometimes shit happens. Your phone just doesn't work, a bug happens, or you don't get the best customer support.

For sometime, I have believed there is really only a collective negative feeling towards the Pixel and Google because this sub is a collection of those negative feelings. In reality, there are not as many Pixel hardware issues or bugs as we think because most of us just come to this sub to confirm and vent our negative emotions when something doesn't work quite like it should. The Verge and every other article comes to Reddit to get our feedback and they report negatively.

From my point of view. My Original Pixel had a mic issue 6 months after I bought it. A defect that I told customer support and they replaced my phone in 2 days. No issues, it came, it worked, and I moved on. My Pixel 2 experience was perfect. My Pixel 3 experience has been amazing. I RMA'd my first and truth be told the defect I was having with my camera was probably because I dropped it. Oh, and I got my device the next day and I had no issues with customer support or shipping. My point being there are these posts here and we just use and see this sub.

The Pixel phones have and are fine. This sub and the r/Android sub do not make up the collective experience of the Google Pixel line. They are just 2 places on the internet. Almost any article I read in the past links right back to just Reddit.

I honestly love the Pixel line. When I go to a sub the thread of issues should be a collective mega thread for problems, support, and bugs, the overall sub should be left to those who have had wonderful experiences. Because no matter what anyone says on this sub, dammit the Pixel phones are amazing.

You make a great point, I read everyday negative things about the pixels phones here , very rarely what make them great.

Pixel 9 Pro XL

I totally understand how you feel, and hope you would reconsider. Been with Google since the Nexus One, 4,5,6P (ughh), P1, and P2XL, and pre-ordered the 4XL. Never had an issue with my devices except the 6P and it's horrible battery problems. Google rma was fantastic.. sent me a new P1XL. It had some problems and they sent me a replacement for that immediately. Maybe reason I always buy from Google direct, because of my own experience with their rma's.

The problem is, people are more likely to post a negative experience they've had, as opposed to a positive one they have. I admit Google has their faults in some places, where if they decided to go a certain route it would be better.. but they are in the software experience and not really hardware I believe. I accept this, and am happy with them.. and also recognize it may not be for everyone. So I hope you would stay and keep this forum/thread alive and kicking with positive (or negative) experiences you've had..

Pixel 4

I'll upvote. I've had far worse luck with quality but I appreciate the phones the same.

Got my Pixel 2XL pretty much at launch. Was perfect, no screen issues, no sound or mic issues, no Bluetooth issues, nothing at all to find fault with. It's still like it now. Takes amazing photos and is really fast. Battery lasts more than long enough for me and charges up really quickly when it's low. Reading this and other subs makes me feel like I won the lottery while everyone else won a lemon which I know isn't really the case.

Pixel 3 128GB

I really enjoy my pixel 3, warts and all, and I don't think I've ever come here seeking a bitch fest.

That being said, maybe we should start an ongoing sign out sheet for you guys. Even though I agree with some of your sentiment here, this type of post is very lame.

Don't be lame guys.

iPhone 15 Pro Max / Pixel 8 Pro 🤖

It's essentially an "I can't handle reading negative things about a phone I love." I wouldn't want to be subscribed to a sub that discourages people from posting about things that are on-topic, including issues. The truth is better.

"ugh, the iPhone had it, why couldn't Google do it?!"..." ugh, Google just keeps copying Apple!". It just seems no one can be satisfied. I've had and loved all 3 pixel generations.. are they perfect? Hell no! But are they damn good phones, IMHO, yup! They've done everything I need them to do every time!

Coincidentally enough the same way we feel about these posts.
