

Skip to main contentr/GooglePixel ×

Search in r/GooglePixel

Create

r/GooglePixel • 4d ago

Tasty-Elk-6050

Is the Google pixel worth it?

Hi everyone 🙋

This is my first time posting here, so nice to meet you all. I'll try to keep this short and straight to the point.

I currently own a Samsung Galaxy Z Flip 6, which I upgraded to from the Galaxy S23 Ultra. I've been a Samsung user for quite a while, and overall Samsung phones have always delivered solid hardware and handled heavy day-to-day use well.

That said, my main issue now is the software experience. Despite the Flip being a flagship (and fairly recent), I'm experiencing noticeable lag and inconsistency. I understand that foldables come with compromises, but honestly, the Flip just doesn't feel as smooth or reliable as my S23 Ultra did. I do enjoy the compact design, but in many areas it feels slower and less refined.

Because of this, I've been seriously considering switching to a Google Pixel, mainly for the clean software and overall UX. Software experience matters more to me than hardware gimmicks at this point.

So I wanted to ask those who've actually made the switch or used Pixels extensively:

Was it worth it? How does Pixel software hold up in real daily use? Any regrets moving away from Samsung or other companies.

Would really appreciate hearing real user experiences. Thanks in advance 🙏

0

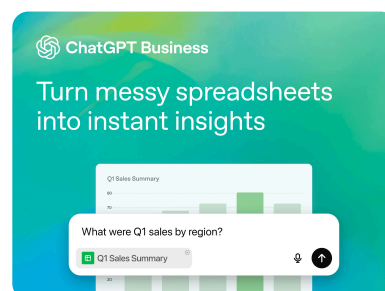

10

Share

OpenAI • Promoted

Summarize dashboards, surface insights, and deliver answers faster than ever with ChatGPT Business.

Sign Upchatgpt.comJoin the conversationSort by: Best ▾Search Commentstyranotaruth_refths • 4d ago

I had pixel 4a for 4.5 years. Started developing battery heating issues after that.

Skip to main content+ Create getting used to pixel cameras, it would be difficult to settle for anything less than that level.

Tasty-Elk-6050 OP • 4d ago

That actually sounds reassuring. Pixel cameras are definitely one of the main things pulling me toward them, especially if you get used to that quality.

I'm also looking more at the mid-range now, and the 9a does seem like a solid option. Honestly, getting around 4+ years before battery issues show up doesn't sound too bad at all — that feels fairly reasonable for a phone.

Thanks for sharing your experience 👍

ResistHistorical2721 • 2d ago

Another 9a owner since last fall. Moved from Moto G series after fighting connector issues, so this is a step up for me. 9a is a very solid phone, not full of frills but perfectly useful and performant. I haven't pushed the cameras heavily but photos look great. For the 9a specifically I especially like the battery life.

tyranotaruth_refths • 2d ago

My experience with pixel series is that the battery life depends on the updates... After Feb 2026 update it has been better. It was bad after the November update.

Xc4lib3r • 4d ago

I know this might or might not be helpful, but both of my Pixel 5 and 7 has been living up just fine. I moved to Pixel 10 Pro recently because of my fear with future DRAM shortage phone prices might increase, but if I were to keep I would still keep my Pixel 7 for another 2-3 years until it reaches end of software support. The only gripe with Google is their CS is not good.

The people who are having a good time with their phone would not spend their time saying how good they are, but the people who are frustrated with their phones would spend their time venting on it either on social media or words of mouth, also generally this subreddit tends to have a negative bias toward Pixel phones (ironic, I know).

Depends on how much you paid for it, Pixel is worth it. Pixel is not worth MSRP. But if you wait until discount which it happens very often, I'd say they're pretty good for the price. I got my P10P through Google Fi deals for around $500. Ymmv though.

Tasty-Elk-6050 OP • 4d ago

That's a fair point, especially about negative bias — people usually speak up more when something goes wrong than when things are working fine.

Skip to main content

Create

Getting a P10P for around $500 sounds like a solid deal. Thanks for sharing your perspective, it helps balance out the discussion. 👍

wijeda • 4d ago

My pixel 7 pro died after 3 years of normal use. It was always in a case, never had drop or even was in water. It's too bad, I loved the phone, you are indeed right that software was amazing.

I bought it via amazon in Belgium, somehow I had a "Czech variant" so Google won't repair it even if I pay.

I don't know if I'm unlucky, but i do feel scammed paying for a premium phone from a major brand, when all of my previous phone (amongst them, a nexus 6p) never just died.

So from my experience, I wouldn't recommend it.

Tasty-Elk-6050 OP • 4d ago

Thanks for sharing your experience. That's really unfortunate, especially with normal use and no physical damage.

It's good to hear that the software lived up to expectations, but the hardware failure and the regional support issue are definitely concerning. Situations like this are exactly what make the decision harder, especially when paying for a premium device.

Appreciate the honest feedback - it's helpful to hear both the positives and the risks, Thanks again for sharing.

originpower • 4d agoCommercial-You-7592 • 4d ago

Well to start (Keep in mind this is my opinion and I am not forcing anyone to agree with me).

1. There are no customization options.
2. There is no Universal Call recording option and even if you setup "For some selected numbers" there is no option to find that call recording in any file manager.
3. Samsung have a lot of useful tweaks in their apps, for example there is this thing called Calling Notes where you can add notes to any unsaved number to call history so that it can remind you later what was the call about, not present on pixel.
4. SPen in Ultra is pretty useful in a lot of use case scenarios.
5. In samsung you can easily delete screenshots from notification or in a few seconds after taking it, but on pixel it's a pain as you have to goto Photos and then delete.
6. There is no AOD customization available which literally kills the future of AOD and notification on AOD.

Create

But if you are an iPhone user, you may like Pixel as it's kinda same.