BasilPowerful Pixel 6a

Killed by Google

Has anyone heard any rumours regarding a next entry for the pixel tablet. I think the 2nd gen was scrapped but the 3rd gen wasn't officially nor mentioned that it was 100% canned. Maybe the cooperation with tsmc for the Tensor g5 can bring it back?

Yet to have it, it is an excellent product. Well integrated into the pixel environment, with enormously sufficient capabilities for everything I do with it, which is everything except playing games. I don't really play mobile games anyway. It's okay for movies and series, it's great for everyday use and it's nice as a hub.

I really wish it would have been a tiny bit smaller, then it would have been so perfect for me. Now I have a galaxy Tab S6 lite and hate my life.

It's not the Tab S6.

As a current iPhone Pro-iPad Pro combo haver, I would love a Google Pixel phone and tablet combo of this caliber. I'm not sure I want to go back to Samsung, but I really do miss Android so I really hope Google does something like this

This is just Google flip flopping on tablets, features and products as typical. Somebody probably got promoted for killing the tablet line and then got promoted again for launching it for the fourth time.

Worwul • 10mo ago

I'd 100% buy a Pixel Tablet if they made a new one. I've been waiting and waiting and waiting.

EverUsualSuspect • 10mo ago

Buy the existing one and they'll announce the new one the moment you do 😊

laid2rest • 10mo ago

I was super keen on a pixel tablet years ago, before they even announced they were releasing one. When they did show it off, I wasn't impressed at all. The same happened with the pixel watch.

J-MRP • 10mo ago

The first Pixel Tablet was on sale recently for $299 and bought a 2nd one for my wife (I bought it with the stand when it came out). For $299 it's a must buy IMHO.

demi9od • 10mo ago

I got mine for 299 as well. I mostly bought it so I could download from streaming apps to watch on flights. Hardly any streaming services allow downloading on Windows or Mac laptops, and it was a lot more capable for the price vs an iPad. Even if I'm sailing the high seas, I always worry about my MacBook screen getting wrecked by someone rapidly reclining the seat in front of me.

It's been as low as 279 and I imagine 250 will happen soon.

I'd say my only complaint is the idle power drain. Compared to any Apple laptop or tablet the Pixel just drains constantly when not in use.

Pixel Tablet is an excellent device. Use it every single day. Don't listen to the haters saying it is a bad product.

artemus_who • 10mo ago

I wouldn't say EXCELLENT but it does what I need it to do. The biggest down for me is it tends to over heat and the screen has really bad glare outdoors.

I love my pixel tablet. It goes everywhere I do and does everything I've thrown at it, so I hope they do continue the line even if they do have a few years break for a significant bump in specs

Pixel 9 Pro

I just want a Nexus 7 sized Pixel tablet with specs to future-proof it for a few years.

ColeBMF • 10mo ago

I threw the towel and recently bought a Lenovo legion tab Gen 3. I'm satisfied so far but I would have preferred a Nexus 7 gen 2025!

chiPersei • 10mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro

Thanks! I'll have to check into it. One question; does it fit into your back pocket? That's one thing I loved about the Nexus 7. I could slip it into the back pocket of my jeans.

ColeBMF • 10mo ago

It does, but not with the case on.

xcleru • 10mo ago

The Nexus 7 was my first ever tablet I saved up for and it was my favorite one of all, after having owned many Samsung and Apple tablets.

I need that kind of portable form factor with OLED

the tablet arena and came back with the pixel that they really hadn't thought through what it would do or what niche it would occupy. It suited nobody.

datigoebam • 10mo ago

My Nexus 9 is still being used to this day.

SiliconTheory • 10mo ago

My guess, a tablet laptop mix. Maybe make android work as a laptop.

UoPeeps • 10mo ago

If they made a version of Android for tablets and laptops that ran a desktop version of the chrome browser I could see it being competitive against iPad. Extensions and profile switching would be a game changer.

tydye29 • 10mo ago

This is my hope too. They ought to compete with Samsung in this department, because I think they could eventually overtake them.

I think the 2nd gen was scrapped but the 3rd gen wasn't officially nor mentioned that it was 100% canned

I mean, you can't have a 3rd gen if you never had a 2nd gen

Few_Perception_7652 • 10mo ago

I reached out to Google about the tablet recently and got an AI response they would pass the word. My inquiry was that new at $500 it gave 3 years of updates. But if I buy today, I will only get 1 more year of

Skip to main content+ CreateSeaMoney3790 • 10mo ago

It's a very mid- tablet in terms of performance and overall quality. I've been using for about a year now. The only reason I got it was they were running a promo for trading in older iPad for full credit. I had first gen iPad pro lying around that I traded in. Just paid 23$ tax. i couldn't believe it was full credit 🤪. Then bought a dock off eBay for 75 bucks. But for 400 I would look at other options for sure. Can't believe they still sell for full price after 2 years.

rxzlmn • 10mo ago

I have a Galaxy Ultra and never understood what the appeal of the Pixel Tablet was. The hardware is just weak and cheap. It does not hold a candle to comparable models from Samsung. There is no specific 'Pixel' integration that I need on a tablet. The Pixel Tablet is and was simply not competitive.

xxdavidxcx87 • 10mo ago

What's the point? Samsung are releasing better products on a technical and imo aesthetic level for less money, that's why it didn't sell.

Samsung is fine for many, but many of us hate their bloatware and other bullshit, like Knox.

Pixel 10 Pro

This. I am actually typing this on a Samsung tablet, and while it's a great device that I use all the time, I really, really, REALLY wish it was running Google's Pixel flavor of Android instead of OneUI.

Just the little things like how Pixel manages notifications and doesn't try to push you into using Samsung Apps would make it much better, since I am already set up and accustomed to the Pixel ecosystem. It's not that Samsung's is bad, but having a cohesive experience across phone and tablet would be ideal.

I wish Google would come out with a 13" iPad Pro competitor. I need a large screen for digital sheet music and 10-11" just isn't big enough.

[deleted] • 10mo ago

This years SOC doesn't look a good upgrade, so I hope we'll get a new Pixel tablet next year with thinner

The issue with the pixel tablet is that it was too expensive for limited compatibility, mid tier specs, mid tier screen and the like. It really should have been marketed as a removable Google home hub, because that's what is really is.

user1484 • 10mo ago

We own three of them and my wife never puts hers down when she's home it seems. I have one at home and one at work. They are great tablets and the speaker dock is a great feature. It's unfortunate if they are abandoning their tablets AGAIN.

Brilliant_Sound_5565 • 10mo ago

I wasn't sure about it, I looked at getting one but thought it looked expensive.at £400 here in the UK!! But maybe I just didn't get what it did? I only have an pixel phone and nest protect smoke alarms so maybe I wouldn't get the full use out of it? I don't have any Google cameras or any plans to get them in the near future. I'm looking at getting a 10omch tablet or bigger formspme Astronomy work I do, but I wouldn't spend that amount on one.

Buyers need confidence that Google is in this for the long haul. I decided to play it safe and wait to see if Google would release a second generation. Instead they killed it, which killed my confidence.

Main_Schedule9853 • 10mo ago

I think those Google tablets are hot garbage. I was looking at one before I bought my Samsung Galaxy tab S9 Plus.. then I realized they were garbage. Google should scrap the whole idea or put some money into them to make them premium

welestgw • 10mo ago

I'd buy one if they integrated better with Bluetooth spin bike metrics, I've always had issues with connections outside of ipads to my ic4 and getting power metrics. That's really my only use for a tablet.

cdegallo • 10mo ago

The only rumor we've heard is google skipped an annual refresh of a second pixel tablet, but not that plans for future pixel tablets, or a skipped-year pixel tablet, are cancelled.

The pixel tablet design--with the dock and corresponding functionality--was an oddly-chosen design.

The pixel tablet would have been an immediate buy for me if, when in docked mode, it was a true household hub to span multiple users, like the nest hub/hub max which I was looking to replace for various reasons.

But it's only a single-user's tablet in docked mode, which is not useful for a household of users for us. Then the dock speaker is useless when it's not connected to the tablet so it's just sitting around taking up space. Then it's not a particularly convincing tablet on its own in the market of current tablets.

Google does a really great job taking a product to 80% of what could be an awesome design but then just...stops... They would have been better making either a tablet-only device competitive with other tablet-only devices, OR leveraging their existing ecosystem of devices and services and have it be a proper fully-functional google home/nest device when docked.

I do wish they would come out with a newer one. I bought one from Best buy as an open box for $260 and have been using it for productivity (homework, note taking with a stylus) and some content consumption in between. I really enjoy the tablet, but man I do wish we get some improvements and newer features on a Tablet 2.

Expensive_Finger_973 • 10mo ago

Google has never been able to get tablets right, for whatever reason. At this point they have brought out and killed their "Google tablet" line enough times that it would take years of them releasing something consistently in that space before I would consider it over a Galaxy Tab or iPad.

Asleep_Onion • 10mo ago

Pixel 9 Pro XL

I don't remember them saying "We're skipping Pixel Tab 2, but we'll make a Pixel Tab 3." What I remember them saying was "We're not making new Pixel Tabs anymore."

bippzydraws • 10mo ago

I would have invested in a Pixel Tablet if they just... Were more capable. I have a 4th gen iPad Air and it's been so solid since I got it like 5 years ago and I feel like the cost was well worth the usage I've gotten out of it.

The thing about the Pixel Tablet is that for the price you just weren't getting the performance. It had a plastic shell. It had a very mediocre SoC. Google didn't even bother making a dedicated pen for it like the Apple Pencil/S-Pen. It felt like baby's first tablet but way too expensive to be practical.

If Google just put actual thought and care into designing it and really pushed for more impressive features, a better build quality, and a dedicated pen, it would have been much more worth the price and I very well may have gotten one. I had a Pixel 7 at the time and it would have been nice for the interoperability.

Consistent-World8535 • 10mo ago

They're so good I have 2 of them and recently saw a great Slickdeal at target and was going to get a third before it sold out.

For $500 yeah it sucks, but no more than $350 with the speaker stand is perfection. It's an amazing device and I use it all the time, so much so that I'm confident to ditch my Pixel phone and get a Samsung again since I can still use the Google exclusive apps like Recorder on my tablets updates and new features that are exclusive to tablets, like lock screen widgets.

Is the Pixel Tablet a success? I don't think so. Is Android for tablets dead? Nope. And I would say it is getting better.

Google is removing the constraint of explicit sizes or orientations (eg portrait / landscape) in Android 16, which is a clear signal of forcing apps that look great beyond the phone layout.

I'm so confused. Why would they stop developing a gen 2 to make a gen 3? That would just make it a gen 2 🤔

I really would like if there was a Pixel Tablet 2

Wonder if their moving of the Chromebook Kernel over to the Android Kernel is a factor... I could rock with that... a Chromebook tablet.

Picked up the Pixel Tablet with base at Christmas time, they even took my old Samsung tablet (which I hated...) for a few bucks too. I find myself using the PT all of time now. Similar experience as my Pixel 8 Pro. Only used the Samsung for book reading and Netflix/Prime/etc... viewing.
