Let's see if Mr. Google reads this xD

1.- Please, how is it possible that there is still no toggle to quickly activate and deactivate NFC when all phones have it?

2.- How is it possible that we still don't have the double tap function to lock the screen??

These are things I don't understand... (I am not going to resort to external third-party applications and give Accessibility permissions).

I was about to say there is a quick toggle for NFC, then I remembered that I installed a "NFC quick settings" from the play store for that function.

Well, the kid who posted it clearly doesn't understand that "Mr. Google" does not use Reddit. Nothing posted in this sub will ever influence changes to Google products.

Still curious about the answer to my question.

Calm down, son.

And I'm sure they do.

The amount of power that NFC uses is insignificant. Either leave it on or turn it off in the settings menu.

Leave it on or turn it off. Or don't. Sitting on the fence is now an Olympic event.

blue132006 • 2mo ago

It's about 1% a day having NFC turned on which most people will probably not notice.

So equal to watching one YouTube Short.

making accidental payments with it turned on

Then turn it off in the settings.

blue132006 • 2mo ago

OP made a suggestion for them to add a quick tile so he doesn't have to open settings every time which could be once or twice a day

Did Google remove NFC from the quick settings? I used to have it on an older Pixel phone. I don't turn it off because I use it all the time, so I haven't looked for it in quick settings.

blue132006 • 2mo ago

Yeah I believe Android 10 was the last Android which had it

Where are you getting the 1% number? There's no way the NFC chip takes that much power.

There was a toggle to turn NFC off... It was in quick settings (when you swipe down) it was so under used only a tiny user base probably even noticed when it was removed.

If you don't want to use third party apps to simplify your life that's a you problem

Honestly, having a quick way to disable NFC would be super handy. I recently had a situation at a store checkout where I wanted to redeem a QR code voucher. But the geniuses there had mounted the laser scanner and the NFC reader so close together that the NFC reader kicked in first and before I could do anything, the amount was immediately charged to my credit card. Really annoying. To be fair, I didn't see that one coming, but next time I'd definitely want to be able to turn off NFC in a convenient and fast way.

In that case open wallet and toggle NFC off (profile, payment setup). My local Sheetz self checkout is set up the same way it takes no time to turn off NFC then turn it back on. In my case I have all the loyalty cards in my wallet so I'm pulling them up anyway to scan the bar code (gotta get them points) so perhaps it's faster for me but that's probably the fastest way I know to turn off NFC.

I know there is a way to use a routine (Google assistant / Gemini) to have NFC off unless you open wallet then it turns on NFC and then after the scan turns it back off but I haven't really looked into it since I don't use routines.

Create

Create a new routine (Personal).

Set a Starter: "When app opens" and choose "Wallet" or another payment app.

Set an Action: "NFC: on".

Add another Action: "When routine ends" and set it to reverse the action (turn NFC back off) if you don't want it on for general use.

Create a shortcut on your home screen for quick activation if needed.

1. Not necessary to turn off NFC that often to have a quick setting
