New Pixel User

Hey all. After the lame iPhone announcement Tuesday, I decided to start migrating into a Pixel. I say start because unfortunately I will be tied to an iPhone for the foreseeable future. My parents (both in their 70s) are both iPhone users and my Dad, is not tech savvy at all so teaching him to Facetime any way other than the traditional way is impossible. Anyways, I'm incredibly pleased with the Pixel 10 pro XL. Battery life is good, picture quality is good, apps run good. Love the fingerprint sensor over Face ID. Definitely prefer the Pixel over Samsung. There are a few little nuance things I'm still adapting too but overall, I'm pleased. Anything I should know or try as a new user that would enhance my experience?

How long have you had your pixel 10 pro XL?

I just got the pixel 10 like three days back, and I'm slowly transitioning out of Huawei phones

I wanted a Samsung, that's always been home for me, but then this phone popped up and I decided to give it a try, and so far it's great, same compliments as yours

My only complaint is that the pixel 10 is slightly smaller than my old phone, 6.5 inches compared to this 6.3 inches, I mean it's negligible, but yeah, other than that, this phone is great

Wednesday is when I got it. I have a standard iPhone 16 pro so bigger screen has been nice. The stock Android OS was the most appealing. I also have a Galaxy S24 Ultra. But I'm just not a fan of the bloatware. It's far less than it used to be on Samsungs but it's still there.

I miss the days before One UI became a thing, their old software was in my opinion, much better, mostly cause of how it looked

I would try using Signal on your phone and your parents phones and see how they feel about that for messaging and video calls. It would let you do cross platform video calls easily and still gets you basically every feature of iMessage. You can change the iMessage app into a folder and put both signal and iMessage into the folder so its at the same location on their phone.

I'm in the same shoes, I have a pixel and Ipad mini for facetime and imessage. Keep it on the hotspot or wifi when needed.

Pixel 10 Pro

Go to Find Hub settings and make sure you change it to network in all areas.

Enable Developer settings and turn off Mobile data always active.

Lastly, make sure wifi calling is set to use wifi.

The Google Keyboard has been a small adjustment. But it's very similar to the iPhone keyboard. I'm migrating off Apple Music which has been a pain but I'm getting there. Just mostly locations of certain settings, things of that nature. Switching back and forth between apps has been an adjustment as well. I think it's probably fair for me to say I'm still in the "set-up" phase but so far I'm very pleased.

I have both an iPhone 12 and a Motorola Edge 2024...and today pixel 10 arrives and the iPhone gets shipped off. Been using the Edge primarily since last fall due to the abysmal battery life/degraded battery in my 12. Overall I like that edge better than the 12 despite it not being as powerful as even the pixel. One of the main things I really like better is gboard. There was a slight adjustment period but following that, I actually much prefer gboard to the ios keyboard. Really about the only thing I like better on the iPhone is I still prefer car play to Android auto, but that's about it. Even the imessage thing isn't any issue since RCS came along. Of course the pixel should be better still all around....except for all the buginess you see everywhere and maybe battery life (my edge is crazy good there). We'll see. Worst case it was free w/trading my 12, so if nothing else, I go back to my edge for my primary and use the pixel for future trade fodder.

I have the Pixel 10 Pro XL and no issue or bugs here. Remember, all the issues you see people post here about the Pixel is very very small. There's other pixel owners out there who don't post here or go on reddit at all and may not have any issues.

My mom's the same way, she refuses to use anything other than an iPhone 😂 my dad was the complete opposite, REFUSED to use an iPhone but had no idea how to work his Androids lol. But welcome!

I switched from iPhone , battery life has been good for Pixel. AI integration has significantly enhanced the usefulness of many other features I use regularly. Beyond feature comparison, not getting a discount on phones is just unacceptable. This isn't a commodity that increases in value over time.

Sounds like me! I have an iPhone 15 Pro for family and friends and work, but I got the Pixel 10 pro for a side venture that relies heavily on photography. I'm not using it full time like my iPhone, but so far I've been really happy with it. 📷

My advice would be start backing up to google one stop paying for icloud storage if you do, also I think you will rather enjoy the pixel than iphone a lot more to offer.

Get ready to really get into mobile photography 📷

After 10+ years of iphone im switchimg to pixel 10 pro in couple of days. Im tired of the bullshit they say in new presentations... and the biggest push towards pixel was "new ios" (i call ot new theme) on iphone liquid glass (more like ass). Im little scared if ill like or get used to android but im willing to try

Welcome as a new Pixel user! 🙌

You made a great decision with the P10PXL especially coming from an iPhone I'm sure you really appreciate the slickness and simplicity of a Pixel (That in fairness you would have been used to with iPhone) but with all the additional benefits of Android and its customizations options if and only as you want. (Especially even with the newest A16 quarterly update, It's even more polished and interactive and really dialled in)

I've been a yearly pixel user since P6P and upgraded each year to the Pro models. I currently have a P9P and have pre ordered a P10PF. But still think the P9P is a wickedly good phone But I just got a really good trade-in for it and have been just been interested in a fold experience for a good few years now and was waiting for Pixel to get to a point where theirs was refined enough and I think with a third generation it's at that point.

I totally get what you mean regarding trying to teach people how to do something different over what they already know, especially an older parent generation. I'm that go to tech guy in my family so I know the feeling. 😂

I know there is an ability to do FaceTime calls on Android (via the browser) but this involves an iPhone user initiating the call and sharing a link and it's just way too much effort to expect someone else to do just to have a call, especially your parents. Lol

There are so many good things in general about the Pixel but the one thing I will outright recommend for you to use and try and it's honestly my favourite on Pixel even above the camera which is already very very good.

- Assistant voice typing

Obviously this is not just a standard "voice to text system" like you would get on any other Android or iPhone. This happens all on the device and is completely non-network, dependant and so reliable and fast. You can also do actions I understand even from the P10 series there's even more things you can do. It's a part of the standard pixel gboard.

It's honestly the one thing that ties me to Pixel and I won't consider another device that won't have this ability or even better than it. I've used other Android, Samsung and even iPhone versions of this and none of them even come close to how quick and accurate this is. (I've basically written about 95% of what I've just said via voice and have had to hardly make any changes. It is just that good.)

Plus gboard now also has more integrated AI writing tools which makes it even better.

But if I think of anything else I will make sure to throw it in a further comment in this thread. But I'm sure all other Reddit users will give you loads of good tips and tricks as well. 😊

Nice 🙌 well first thing I always do on new pixel phones is go into (Developer options) change (Window Animation Scale to .5X) (Transition animation scale .5X) and (Animator duration scale .5X) this makes your apps open & close LTE fast also phone 📱 is faster more smoother Enjoy

i hate the battery life on pixel 10 pro xl coming from samsung s21 ultra. what settings are you using

[deleted] OP • 5mo ago

I haven't really adjusted much. This weekend will be the true test as I will be using it tracking football/fantasy football scores and stats and music.

OP here...the responses have been great. Appreciate that.

One question...is there a way to jump to the top of a page without having to scroll and scroll? Similar to iPhone tapping the top of the screen?
