Switched from iPhone 15 Pro to Pixel 9 Pro XL and holy moly it's fackin awesome!

This is in response to this post:

https://www.reddit.com/r/GooglePixel/comments/1ez8t91/switched_from_iphone_15_pro_to_pixel_9_pro_xl_and/

I did the same thing. Went from a 15 pro to a pixel 9 pro xl. After reading that thread I was a little worried about making the transition. Rest assured -- ZERO issues. The phone is silky smooth and runs instagram great. I don't use that chinese propaganda app tik tok so who knows about that but instagram is awesome and overall the phone performs great.

Pros:

- excellent performance overall, I don't game so I could care less about that
- pictures are awesome and photo editing tools are great
- screen is gorgeous
- AI is very nice so far
- keyboard is much better than iphone

Cons:

- RCS isn't enabled on iphones yet so that's the biggest handicap right now with my friends who use imessage but next month that will change.
- I miss all the physical buttons, wish pixel had more
- gonna miss magsafe

If you like power banks, it is far and away the most sensible solution

Lollipop126 • 1y ago

shouldn't it mostly be a backup? at least with a pixel, the main reason I run out of battery is using maps or my camera all day. both of which are heat generators. Charging via induction adds even more heat. It makes charging slower and damages the battery. In a pinch, it's much better than nothing but shouldn't be the norm right?

Pentosin • 1y ago

8Pro to 10pro XL

Yeah. Wireless charging from a powerbank wastes alot of capacity. Much better to just use a very short cable.

provides adequate screen protection. Magnet feels very secure on my pro-clip mag-safe mount in my car. Also, continues to work just fine for normal wireless charging on my Pixel Stand.

Only slight knocks against it are that I'm not a huge fan of the texture of the materials, and the Dark Green color is a bit different than what I expected.

Overall though, one of the better cases I've ever gotten for ~$20. I appreciate that the branding is so subtle.

People don't mention the keyboard enough here. I have an iPhone as my work phone and Pixel 9 Pro XL and the iPhone keyboards suck so much compared to Gboard that I had to install the app and replace the default iOS keyboard on my work phone.

The keyboard on the iphone is terrible. I use one for work and have to type symbols a lot. I fucking hate not being able long press and having to go through 3 screens to type an underscore.

deltaturx • 1y ago • Edited 1y ago

Even when you replace the keyboard, iOS is horrible with text selection and personally I hate how it handles notifications. I too have an iPhone work phone and I wished my work didn't switch everyone over to iPhone but it is what it is (used to be a choice). For me, when it comes to productivity and sorting notifications, Android nails it.

InterestingGrape0 • 1y ago

iOS notifications sucks, and then combine that with an iphone that doesn't have always on display = nightmare

meatierologee • 1y ago

Same situation here. I've had to use an iPhone for work and the keyboard really is inferior by a significant margin.

Joeblaah • 1y ago

This will sound stupid but I'm so fed up with the keyboard on iPhone I am returning to Android. I miss Gboard without the glitches and being able to swipe style without errors cause the keyboard actually learns my style and continues to improve. Plus Android is more exciting than iPhone imo not sure how I survived to iPhone 15 Pro Max from the iPhone 6. Oh wait the resale value of iPhones smdh anyway excited for pixel 9 pro xl. Can't decide between mous clarity, spigen tough armour which I've used on all my phones no issue and trying spigen Enzo Aramid. Any feedback on cases would be appreciated. Thx!

Which physical button were you hoping to have on Pixel? I always liked the idea of having the ringer toggle, but the iPhone 15 Pros did away with that and I just keep my phone on vibrate 100% of the time these days.

[deleted] • 1y ago • Edited 1y ago

I love that toggle on my iPhone 14 Pro Max, and dreading the future upgrade without it!

I like the GUI on my wife's Pixel 6 Pro but damn it overheats if you looked at it funny.

That terrible modem signal burned the battery so fast always searching for the tower.

Her Sony Xperia work phone had great connections with and my iPhone, she HATES the Xperia phone but it worked a lot better than her Pixel 6 Pro, she is hoping the Pixel 9 Pro XL is much more reliable.

Yeah that's what she is hoping for, like she told her Sony Xperia has all the hardware to wow you, but incredible uncomfortable, and the Sony GUI makes everything a total chore, and she refuses the Samsung GUI (we deal with it a lot because both her parents' phones are Galaxy Magsafe is a ring of magnets built into the iPhone that allow accessories like wallets power banks and wireless chargers to magnetically attach to the phone. They also have cases for iPhone and Android with the same magnet array that give similar functionality.

I'm making the switch. Just not sure if it's Pixel or S24 Ultra.

My main issues is getting people to video chat on what's app or messenger.

Second issue is sharing pictures during an event using something other than Airdrop. Probably will have to share an album link or something. Third is sending money to my kid on something other than Apple cash. She's not 13 so I can't add a debit card to her phone and Zelle cash to her.

I made the switch. It was almost seamless. Honestly it was just the first day I had to use both phones and was a bit overwhelmed but by day 2 the iPhone was shut off and put away. Everything is so much more intuitive... Like my brain wants to swipe a certain way to do something and it just... Works.

Far superior. So easy to use and so many options that are not overwhelming like on iPhone iMessage is the con.

RCS should not be a con....

Apple does not care to improve anything to the masses unless it benefits them. This is the issue with Apple and iMessage and it's baffling why consumers are ok with this.. yet nitpick the dumbest shit like camera zooming issues.

At least Google is trying to resolve a multiple platform standard for messaging with RCS. Not to mention almost everything they offer is available on all platforms as well.

I'll never forget Tim Cook saying "just buy your mother an iPhone" in response to resolving cross platform compatibility. That right there is why I don't own Apple products. F that company.

Mobile carriers' failure to standardize a modern messaging standard beyond SMS 20+ years later is not Apple's burden. Your frustration is sorely misplaced.

Even when carriers "agreed" to adopt RCS they still fucked it up and relied on Google to carry the standard forward. Until literally this year with Apple's announcement to adopt the RCS standard profile, RCS has been functionally "Android iMessage" because Google manages the only RCS implementation any carrier has bothered to implement.

All of the major US carriers announced a joint venture to adopt cross-compatible standard profile RCS in 2019, called the CCMI, and then killed it 18 months later in 2021 without accomplishing anything. Three months later they all announced one by one that they were adopting Google RCS instead.

As usual, mobile carriers are notoriously shit at doing anything that requires all of them to work together.

RCS dead announcement in 2021: <https://arstechnica.com/gadgets/2021/04/verizon-att-and-t-mobile-kill-their-cross-carrier-rcs-messaging-plans/>

Google RCS announcement for carriers: <https://www.theverge.com/2021/7/20/22584443/verizon-android-messages-rcs>

Be mad at the mobile carriers you pay hundreds of dollars to every year who haven't bothered to improve the experience you pay for in decades. It's not Apple's job to create, implement, own, and maintain infrastructure to support their competitors with iMessage. That was the promise of RCS, and mobile carriers failed all of us.

And just to be clear, I love my Pixel 9 Pro XL, and I love my iPhone 15 Pro Max. None of you are owed iMessage simply because Apple did what the carriers wouldn't do and delivered a viable SMS alternative 13 years ago to their paying customers.

Kruxx85 • 1y ago

Pixel 8 Pro

All of what you've said is accurate, but you're missing one key point.

If Apple had opened up iMessage to be a brand agnostic service, like what Google is doing, then all would be fine.

I'm sure your response will be "well that's not their responsibility" and you're right. But the fact that one company is willing to do it, and the other isn't, is entirely the reason we have disdain for one, and not the other.

+ 2 more repliesandromjb • 1y ago • Edited 1y ago

You can believe whatever you want. Apple never even tried to resolve the issue, they only solidified a walled garden.

iMessage is only one of many examples.

It took them years to adapt USB-C...

You cannot even upgrade their computers anymore. Everything is soldered down. They released the MacBook "Pro" with no ports.. made consumers spend hundreds of dollars on adapters, then brought the ports back years later..

They are not consumer friendly and if you think they are you are brainwashed.

I'm pretty sure the new Pixel phones are amazing, but as long as any new smartphone will be compared with the same phrase, "this is the new iphone killer", "this is the iphone of Android" etc, I'm gonna stick with my iphone, or a new iphone model. Why switch to something that tries so hard to compete or to become something that you already use? I really like the design of the new Pixel phones, but if I want a phone that looks and feels like an iphone, I already have that.

Skip to main content+ Create

Because it's actually your phone that you can do whatever you want, unlike Apple that thinks you're so stupid you need to use their defaults. You can install whatever app you want. Unlike iPhone etc

+ 15 more replies

hkimkmz • 1y ago

No phone is killing iPhone. Nor are android phones going away. Much the same shit for Tesla killer. There's enough room in this space for all offerings.

Pixels are competing as hard as they can on the hardware. iPhones have always had incredible hardware. Pixels finally feel like they are there.

When it comes to OS, Android has been superior for years imo and iOS has been competing to be on par.

It's harder to talk Android as a whole cause there are so many flavors but I'll talk about pixels in general.

Having said that, notifications universally are better on Android. Having the little badge show up on the status bar up top serves as a reminder and a to do list you. You also have a lot of control over the type of notification you get and can really find time that experience. If you grab most people's iPhone and pull down their notifications shade and tell me they don't have literally hundreds of notifications going back weeks. It's dysfunctional and I think it's systemic.

Pixels direct my call, hold for me, call notes, clear call are all AI features that deal with phone calls. It makes my only time I actually call people (customer service) so much better.

Pixels also start with exclusive google photos feature. When best take came out, I've had iPhone users send me a bunch of photos to run it through my pixels best take so I can send it back to her. They also take excellent photos in general and I'm very excited for add me on my next outing.

Pixels this year have Gemini Live and this one actually blew me away. I was installing a new thermostat yesterday and I was asking about different wires and instead of searching and scrolling through articles, I had it answering me while I was actively working on it. I can also keep going back and forth with questions like I had someone with me who knew just what to do. Very excited for when the video component of this comes live.
