Any fixes?

mgasperl • 6mo ago

Hmm, I didn't have this issue. Battery time quite okay.

hooblagoo • 6mo ago

If you had to guess: where do you think the 9a will come down to pricewise during/after the 10 release? Right now it's $399.

Oakenfell • 6mo ago

I'm waiting for the 9 pro to go down in price too. Apparently it was down to $600 on Best Buy last week but I'm hoping that the official Google store has a discount sooner rather than later so that I can trade in my Pixel 8.

Pixel 8 / Pixel 9

I like the 8A and 9A but they lack HDR video recording and I have lot of HDR displays at home, so I care about that.

1Cobbler • 6mo ago

Apologies if this has been discussed before but I can't find a topic anywhere with the same issue.

My pixel 7 randomly dies when I unplug it after charging. It's not a charge issue, the battery is fine and when I plug it in again it powers up, I can unplug it and use it like normal for an entire day, so it's not a battery charge issue.

It's more annoying than critical. Is there a fix for this?

It sounds like a bad cap or similar component that isn't gracefully handling the switch from external DC power to the battery, leading to a voltage dip low enough to knock out the phone on the power transition.

I don't think there's an easy fix unfortunately simply because it's not a common problem, but you could try asking a local repair shop about it. Theoretically someone experienced that has access to a board schematic could diagnose the problem part and replace it with the right equipment.

I'm on P7Pro and I want to switch because I want a smaller screen size - I am confused between P10 and P10Pro, is the 200$ difference justified for the screen and camera upgrades? Camera is subjective, I get it, I'm not sure how different the screen is?

I'll try to go to a Google store in person to see them, but I'd appreciate any inputs!

I just noticed there's a google search bar at the bottom of my home screen that I'm pretty sure wasn't there before, and I can't find an option to get rid of it. (I'm really not fond of my bottom tray of apps not being the very bottom-most thing on my screen.)

Is there any way to move it or remove it altogether?

Hi! I saw that in US the Pixel 9a and Pixel 8 Pro have some discount. The 9a is $400 and the 8 Pro is $600.

Should i go for the 8 Pro since it has better hardware (I think?) or for the 9a because it is near 2 year newer?

I heard that Google offers 7 years of updates on the phone, so that takes 2 years of lifespan from the 8 Pro.

Pixel 10 Pro XL

Probably a stupid question. Does the case need to have Pixelsnap/Magsafe magnets or would a case without magnets work fine with Pixelsnap/Magsafe chargers, docks, etc?

Having them in the case helps to make sure the case isn't too thick for the magnets in the charger.

If you're using a flat charger where the phone is held on by gravity and the magnets just align everything, you're probably fine with a case without. If you're using a Pixelsnap/Magsafe mount, you'll want a case with magnets to be safe.

Pixel 8 Pro

Looking to upgrade my P8P to either a 10, or 10 pro but I'm not really sure which to go for. I don't do too much photography with my phone so a camera isn't high on the list (I'm happy with the output of the P8P), I game a bit on my phone but nothing too taxing. I generally use it for Reddit, music, YouTube and general internet searching. Battery is quite high on my list. I can get to about 2200 with 20%ish left. Thanks.

DeathKringle • 6mo ago

The p8p is equivalent to the 9 pro XL and 10 pro XL in size.

So if you get the regular 10 pro there will be a size difference. Which is about the same as the regular 10.

Due to improvements in the silicon, battery management, along with a newer modem and better manufacturing from Tsmc. You should see longer use time.

With any of the 10 models.

Just do not forget the size differences since the 8 series didn't have a XL model. And only had 8A, 8, 8 PRO(xl size for the 9 and 10 series)

Pixel 10 Pro

A few questions regarding potentially buying the Pixel 10 Pro from Google:

I know I've seen occasional posts on here about people who have ordered from Google, and for whatever reason their shipment was lost or damaged in transit. They tried to reach out to google who was less than helpful, and I think maybe they initiated a chargeback which got their Google Account banned.

This would be an awful situation - obviously can't just let a $1000 be lost for nothing, but getting a Google account banned would be hugely frustrating with how integrated everything is. Is this kind of situation at all common, or just a very rare occurrence? I have never ordered directly from Google, and stories like these have kept me wary of ever doing so.

Regarding trade-ins - how often do people get blindsided by a lower offer? I know that again I've read some horror stories here but not sure if they are the rare exception or more common. I am thinking to entire cost of the new phone is being eaten with no trade in).

Guess you could say I am a bit paranoid of the possible hiccups with ordering from Google after reading this subreddit too much, haha.

Torn between Google Pixel 9 Pro XL or Google Pixel 10 / 10 Pro. Hi! Im new to Google Pixel phones and having an old One Plus 7 Pro I was waiting for the 10s reveal to get one. However as it dropped I realized that maybe instead of goinf for the Pixel 10 256GB a better option is to go to the Pixel 9 Pro XL 256GB which in price is identical or is even cheaper (999€ in Spain vs ~900€).

Im not going after the Google Pixel 10 Pro XL because its so expensive and checking the differences between that one and the 9 Pro XL, its like pretty similar except some select features.

Still, the main deciding poing for me is battery duration and temperature. We still dont have the Pixel 10's to check that, and I heard that the Pixel 9's tend to get hot in the hand, which the 10's maybe not.

Any thoughts? Thanks :)

Pixel 9 Pro

Hi there, I've been using my Pixel 9 Pro for a few months now and have Battery Optimization On that limit battery charge to 80%. The thing is that it states that it charges to 100% once every other week, though from my time owning the phone I've never seen it go to 100%. Does it charges to 100% but displays 80 or is it not working properly?

Not necessarily a Pixel question (although I am asking it because I have one now), how do I add multiple Google accounts but keep them separate?

My work account uses Google and ever since I added it's it overwrote my entire calendar which is driving my crazy because I don't care to look at the calendar all the time, only when I am able.

On iOS which I just switched from, the Gmail app (and therefore all Google apps really) had an "enable/disable" option, I'm not seeing a similar thing in the Android environment.

Looking to get the 10 pro XL as my second phone. Full honesty: how is the pixel performance?

Currently I am using an S25U and a Xiaomi 15 Ultra. I am looking to sell the xiaomi for a number of reasons. I always have a backup phone and am sort of a flagship lover, and the pixel 10 pro xl is looking like an amazing option

For pixel 9 pro owners, genuinely, how is the overall performance of the phone? From fluidity, snappiness, features, power etc?

I mostly am using a lot of apps at once, taking pictures, things like this. Gaming wise I do light gaming, something like Honkai Star rail mostly.

Any connectivity issues? Signal wise etc? I am using t mobile usa if that matters.

I'm very big on software and how it performs. Part of why I am ditching the Xiaomi and looking for an alternative. With the S25U already being a "power phone" I see something like a Pixel like a good phone #2 choice. I just want to make sure there isn't any stuttering, lag, anything like this from basic- to medium phone usage.

Also the xiaomi haptics suck. I remember using a pixel 8 pro and I remember pixels having the best haptics I've ever felt. But yeah, considering what I'm looking for in a second phone, would you guys say to pull the trigger on the 10 pro xl?

I've got a Pixel 9 Pro. I'm not a power user at this point considering most of my uses are web browsing and YouTube. I'm running Google Sheets occasionally and running work Microsoft apps when needed.

Pros:

Skip to main contentCreate

Software integrations are amazing. If you use Google applications, the way Pixels mesh all the different apps into your daily use is phenomenal. Even the AI news integration is very nice to have. VPN by Google is well implemented. Google's software is second to none at this stage.

The screen gets very bright, and the build quality is solid. I rock my phones without cases and this one only gets scratches every once in a while (no cracks). Definitely one of my favorite phones from a build perspective.

Cons:

The mediocre SoC Google puts on it means it struggles with demanding tasks. People talk SO much about gaming, but this extends into photo/video editing or design work. If you're running any productivity grade applications or attempting to do serious graphical work on the fly, this ain't it chief. Even general photography/videography is slower than the competition as a result. Those seconds start to add up.

The price is too high for lagging hardware. I got this phone as part of a trade-in promotion for my Pixel 8 Pro and a price match, so the effective price was like $250. Paying $1,100 for this model at the time would have been a joke. A Pixel 9a gets 95% of my use case done for much cheaper.

I've never purchased a Pixel at launch. Should I be able to walk into a Verizon store on the 20th and buy a 10?

Academic_Act_2088 • 6mo ago

Hey everyone! Would love your expert thoughts on my conundrum :)

I have tried to be financially and consumeristically better than I have historically been, and made by my current Pixel 6 last just over 3 years before considering an upgrade.

However, I'm feeling a bit swamped with the options coming up, as well as the optimal timeline to buy one.

I have traipsed through tons of posts on this subreddit to do some research myself before asking this question, but I'm still uncertain because of all the purchasing options and opinions out there.

My budget is only about $500-$600, maybe a bit more if it's a really great deal.

Preferences for next model:

- Would love a Pro model, as I love the dedicated zoom lens I've seen on my friends' Pixel Pros
- Would ideally love a >128GB storage, however this preference seems to be the biggest obstacle to great deals
- Would obviously love as advanced a Pixel series as possible

Skip to main contentCreate

For the last year or two, my strategy was to wait until this year's Black Friday and see what I could afford, but I've also seen that the Google Store in the US is running a sale on the Pixel 8 Pro for $599, which includes a Pixel Watch 2. I don't need the watch, but presumably I could sell it (?) and recuperate some of the money, making it an even better deal. However, this special is only on the 128GB option, and I really think I'd love a bigger one.

So I guess my question boils down to: if you were me with my budget and preferences:

1. which model would you buy?
2. from where?
3. and when (i.e. now, after the 10 drops, or at Black Friday)?

Do you recommend the Google Store, or Amazon (and which country?) or...I'm also very open to some of these other websites that I've seen floating around this subreddit, would love to hear opinions on those.

Thanks very much :)

Ok-Candidate32 • 6mo ago

I've been thinking about rooting my Pixel 8 Pro for a while now, but unfortunately that tends to break contactless payments now and that's just not something I can sacrifice. If I get a pixel watch 3 to use with Google pay (although I do have other reasons to buy one) will it work independently from my phone so I don't have to worry about root? If so, is there anything I should keep in mind or know about? They are currently on sale on Amazon for like 290 euro which is a pretty good price if you ask me.

I have a Pixel 6a that qualifies for the Battery Performance Programme. I have the update that reduces my battery capacity and throttles my charging speed.

My problem is that I bought the phone when I lived in the UK but now I live in Canada. When I use Google's Repair services wizard it tells me that the IMEI cannot be repaired in this region. I won't be returning to the UK anytime soon.

My only real option is to take the cash. Is it possible to replace the battery myself using the cash that they send me? I am a technical guy and I have done some other tricky repairs before like Switch Joycons. If I replaced it myself would it remove the software throttling?

EDIT: I see that iFixit sell a kit but it's out of stock.

I use Google Fi and currently have a Pixel 7. Been following the Pixel 10 stuff somewhat but not SUPER closely. My 7 is fine and I'm not dying to upgrade, but a nicer camera is a big draw for me (P7 is nice but I'd like to have a better zoom). I loaded up the Google Fi shop and I see that I can pre-order a Pixel 10 Pro for $549 ($22.88/mo for 24 mo) or a Pixel 10 for $449 ($18.71/mo).

Seems like this subreddit is kinda down on the 10, so I've also been considering the 9-series phones. I checked out the prices on the 9 (non-Pro) in the Fi store, and it's $399, The 9 Pro is $599. So the 9 is $50 less than the 10, but the 9 Pro is $50 MORE than the 10 Pro.

9 = $399

10 = $449

10 Pro = $549

9 Pro = $599 (WHAT?)

Skip to main content+ CreateDeathKringle • 6mo ago

The 10 pro seems to be coming with a vapor chamber which will improve performance and cooling of the device its self. The display will allow its refresh rate to be dropped to 1hz on the pro vs the 10 which is 60hz.

This translate to potentially significant battery savings depending on what you do.

If you read a lot, text etc then your viewing static content and low variable refresh rates help with battery.

I'd go 10 pro if you could handle the full or monthly price increase.

It should on paper be a better device overall compared to the 10.

But the modem and other tech on any of the 10 series will be a jump up for battery life, reception, cellular support and speeds etc. no matter which one you get.

Seeking advice:

tl;dr I made two google store preorders for P10P. Planning to keep the google fi preorder phone and trade-in old pixel using unlocked preorder with a higher-value. Any concerns?

I pre-ordered an unlocked P10P on event day with a trade-in. Yesterday I realized as an existing Fi customer, the $450 instant off was a better deal, even if the trade-in was lower. Also yesterday I learned about the P6A battery program, signed-up, and got the $150 discount code overnight by email.

I just placed a second order for a google-fi P10P with trade-in and discount code. This maximizes savings. Unfortunately, my original pre-order just changed status to preparing shipment, so i can't cancel.

Both will be arriving in the next week. My plan is to keep the Fi P10P, return the unlocked device and trade-in my old Pixel using the higher-valued unlocked trade-in kit (discarding the Fi trade-in kit). My understanding is this will result in the trade-in value being issued as store credit. That's fine with me for an extra $160; I can apply it to the P11PF next year. Has anyone been in a similar situation? Is this a bad idea? Does this violate Google Store terms of service?

Is the Pixel 10 likely to sell out from the Google Store (in the UK) on launch? I'm on holiday for a couple of week so I'm hesitant to pre-order when I won't be in the house. Will it still be in stock a week or two after release?

I've got a Pixel 6a and looking to upgrade to a Pixel 10 Pro via Verizon trade-in. I did get the forced Battery Management update and the Battery Replacement Program offer, but did not replace my battery (I took the Google Store credit); it has 546 charges remaining.

remove a damaged battery (to the extent it is removable) & dispose of it properly. Note: if the battery is damaged & not removable, your device is not eligible for trade in.*

Does anyone know what the Pixel 6a battery issue $150 Google Store voucher can be used for? Is it anything on the store, or just a new phone? The details of it have been unclear and I haven't been able to figure out if I can use it towards new cases and chargers or not

Pixel 10 Pro

In the past, how long did it take to ship pre-ordered phones?

Is upgrading from Galaxy A53 to Pixel 10 worth it? I have been wanting to upgrade my Galaxy A53 for ages now, performance is starting to degrade, it overheats nonstop, and the chipset inside it? Straight up bad. When I was thinking of upgrading, I realized Pixels would be a good choice, so I was looking for the best Pixel I could afford. I was considering 6a, 8 Pro, 9, 9a, etc. But then I found out Pixel 10 was coming up, and it would be the first Pixel to have a Tensor chipset made from TSMC fabrication, rather than the Samsung fabrication that is infamous for causing overheating issues. But people told me that Pixel 10 was a downgrade from the previous Pixel base models, they were saying the camera sensor is too bad. So is it worth it or do I have to choose another Pixel?

I have a Pixel 6 Pro. Would the 10 Pro XL be the closest to that?

Is anyone else's base P9 battery really shit? I've just taken the L and turned off 5G and smooth display to get through day and a half, also use 80 limit. Fuck is going on Yup. Absolute shit. It's a shame because the last few updates fixed that problem from a previous update.
